1. 教學目標

This course employs interdisciplinary research and place-based field studies (Humanities Walks) to guide students through a deep exploration of island environments, historical trajectories, settlement patterns, traditional heritage, and contemporary social issues. At its core, the course treats "Humanities" and "Landscape" as an indissoluble whole. It aims to cultivate students who possess both a macro-perspective of cultural landscapes and a micro-mastery of local knowledge.

2. 教學綱要

Practical Inquiry & Field Skills: Students will synthesize local studies literature with outdoor field investigations to master practical skills in systematic observation, documentation, interviewing, and problem identification.

Interdisciplinary Critical Thinking: By integrating knowledge from the humanities, geography, and ecology, students will develop the capacity to critically analyze the historical and contemporary transformations of island landscapes.

Local Engagement & Social Practice: Students will translate their findings into actionable proposals for cultural preservation and sustainable development, fostering a deep commitment to local social practice.

6. 成績評定及課堂要求

Active seminar participation & presentation: 60%; Final project: 40% *Final Project: Working as local guides, students will present a Live Interpretive Tour along a self-designed route. This is paired with an actionable proposal—a comprehensive plan that offers solutions for heritage preservation or sustainable development in Jinmen.

*This is an active learning seminar, not a lecture-based course. Your primary task is to function as a "Landscape Translator". You will collaborate in thematic cohorts to deconstruct weekly readings and synthesize them with field observations. The course culminates in a relay-style guided tour, where you will lead your peers through an interpretation of Jinmen's Cold War and ecological landscapes. Your success depends on your ability to bridge academic theories (e.g., Szonyi's social mobilization) with micro-narratives discovered on-site.

*Students participating in the field study are responsible for procuring their own travel insurance policies before the trip.
(實地考察的同學，請於行程前自行辦理個人旅遊平安保險事宜。)
